Second Hand Drilling Rod Price in Australia: 2025 Supplier Deals, Cost Guide & ROI Tips

Why Australian Miners Are Switching to Used Drilling Rods

Need second hand drilling rods at low prices? You're not alone. Over 65% of Australian mining contractors now use refurbished equipment to cut costs. With iron ore prices fluctuating and strict emission rules tightening budgets, used drilling rod prices in Australia dropped 12% in 2023 - making this the best time to buy smart.

Breaking Down the Costs

A brand-new 6-meter drilling rod costs AU$800-$1,200. A quality second-hand rod? Just AU$300-$550. For large projects needing 50+ rods, that's a AU$25,000+ saving. But prices vary wildly:

Worn rods (visible cracks): AU$180-$250

Refurbished rods (tested): AU$400-$550

Custom lengths (8-10m): +15% cost

How to Avoid Costly Mistakes

Last year, a Queensland mining company lost AU$62,000 buying untested rods that failed within weeks. Here's what works:

Always demand 3rd-party inspection reports

Compare price per piece from 3+ suppliers

Check warranty - 6 months minimum for used rods

Top Suppliers Offering Quotations Now

Global Rock Tools (Perth) sells ex-lease Atlas Copco rods at AU$420/piece. For bulk buyers (>20 units), they offer free shipping across Western Australia. Chinese suppliers like Hengwang Group also ship to Sydney/Melbourne ports at AU$310/piece (FOB price), but add 10% GST and 14-day lead time.

Government Incentives You Can Use

Australia's Instant Asset Write-Off scheme (extended to June 2025) lets small businesses claim immediate tax deductions on equipment purchases under AU$20,000. For a $15,000 used rod purchase, that's a $4,350 tax saving. Combine this with supplier discounts, and your ROI jumps 30-40% vs new rods.

Want exact price lists? Sydney-based Drillpro Equipment releases monthly quotes for stock like Sandvik DR460 rods (used) at AU$375-$490. Their mid-June clearance sold 80 rods in 48 hours - proof that good deals vanish fast. Get your custom quotation now before the mining season peak hits.
