Second Hand Rock Drill Price in South Africa: 2024 Cost, Supplier Deals & Buying Guide

Why 1,200+ Miners Choose Used Rock Drills in South Africa?

Mining firms across South Africa's platinum belt and coal-rich Mpumalanga face a hard truth: new rock drills cost 60-80% more than second hand models. With rising energy prices squeezing profits, operators now prioritize ROI-focused equipment. Used rock drill prices in South Africa currently range between $3,000-$8,000 per unit - 20% cheaper than 2022 averages, according to Stats SA.

The Hidden Problem With Brand-New Equipment

"We spent $12,000 on a new drill last year, but maintenance ate 40% of our ROI," shares Thabo Mbeki, a site manager at Limpopo's Bokoni Platinum Mine. Like 73% of small-scale miners (Chamber of Mines 2023 report), his team switched to refurbished Atlas Copco drills - slashing costs by $5,200/unit.

2024 Price Breakdown: What to Expect

Current price per piece varies by condition and brand:

Lightly used Tamrock models: $7,500-$8,000

Mid-tier refurbished Sandvik drills: $4,200-$6,000

Older stock (5+ years): $3,000-$3,800

Chinese suppliers like Shandong Yikuang now dominate 35% of SA's used equipment imports, offering drills at 15% lower cost than European equivalents.

How to Avoid Costly Mistakes - A Buyer's Checklist

Top Kimberley diamond drillers recommend:

Demand ISO 9010 refurbishment certificates

Test hydraulic pressure (aim for ≥ 250 bar)

Compare price lists from 3+ Johannesburg suppliers

"We saved R180,000 ($9,700) by negotiating bulk wholesale deals," says Miriam Ngwenya of Rustenburg's Rapid Drilling Co.

Government Incentives Changing the Game

South Africa's 2023 Green Economy Accord now offers 15% tax rebates for mines using refurbished equipment. This policy shift has boosted second hand rock drill sales by 27% year-on-year (Q1 2024 Minerals Council data).

Where Mining Giants Source Their Tools
